Senior Scrolls V: Skyrim was one of the final open games of the last decade. He introduced us to dragons for the first time in Elder Scrolls, as these frightening beasts can appear at any time, anywhere. Along with the dragons came the signature of the new mechanics of the game: the dragon screams. This gave players the opportunity to use their character's own voice as a weapon. The consequences of these cries were incredibly varied and ranged from calling a dangerous thunderstorm to forcing enemies to flee. Let's now look at the top 10 screams from Skyrim. Updated February 12, 2020 By Anastasia Maillot: Screams are some of the strongest powers in Skyrim, and with DLCs tons of new ones have been introduced into the game that have previously been missed. Some of them bring in brand new game mechanics that are not found in the basic Skyrim game. With that in mind, we decided to include some of the best shouts from Skyrim in DLCs, namely from Dawnguard and Dragonborn. 15 Fiery Breath Dragons are best known for their ability to breathe fire, even in Skyrim. Their powerful fire attack can really devastate the enemy even at long range, as the consequences of the scream continue to burn the target over time. Well, now there's a cry that allows Dragonborn to do it too. Fire scream not only waiting for everyone in its path, but also knocks enemies back. The damage to the targets depends on how many words are unlocked, and at least it can withstand 90 fire damage. 14 Tagged for Death When faced with particularly tough enemies, flagged for death screaming can be surprisingly helpful. It's definitely not better in terms of his stats, but because of the weakening curse he applies to enemies within a full minute, he has his application. Marked for death basically lowers your opponent's armor rating and depletes their health over time for 60 seconds in a row. With the third word unlocked, the penalty armor is -75 per second and the health penalty is -3 per second. 13 Storm Call While breaking down magic allows you to do cool things with sparks, there is nothing like calling an actual storm to destroy your enemies. With Storm Call, Dragonborn can cause a powerful thunderstorm with random flashes of lightning attacking enemies all around them. Each lightning hit causes about 80 damage, and it does not distinguish the target. Each of the innocent bystanders, followers, actual enemies will take damage during the storm, so be careful when using this cry, especially in public places. 12 Whirlwind Sprint While most screams provide some additional damage through similar mechanics like destruction of magic, there are also a few cries that just have as part of the toolkit. The Whirlwind Sprint, which learned during the main quest, is one such cry. Despite the lack of utility in combat, it is a significant ability. Whirlwind Sprint Pushes Dragonborn Forward It's a great way to jump gaps or avoid trap traps In the dungeons. In combat, it can sometimes be used either to get into the face of the enemy faster, or to find shelter faster. For those who want to just get to the goal quickly, it's also a good mobility cry to use. 11 Bend Will For those who have Dragonborn DLC, one of the best screams will be available during his main quest. Much like other cries, learning all three words will give you the full power of this ability, which is nothing less than tame and ride dragons just like Miraak does. That being said, with only two words you already get a pretty strong cry that allows you to turn enemies into allies in a short period of time. Anything that tames a hostile creature is always useful when fighting pf enemies, which is why Bend Will is so incredibly strong. 10 Drain Vitality Players who have Dawnguard DLC is set to know that some of the legendary dragons found in this version of the game have an extremely annoying skill: leaking vitality. Their ability to scream at Dragonborn and drain magicka, health and stamina all at the same time makes them intimidating opponents. The good news is that Dragonborn can really recognize this cry as well. Drain Vitality scream in its best drains 5 points from magicka, health and endurance per second for a total of 30 seconds. It may not be the strongest, but it can be devastating against enemies who rely on magicka and stamina but have large health pools. 9 Dragon Aspect One of the most unique screams in the game Dragon Aspect Scream. Found in Dragonborn DLC, once unlocked to the highest level it gives incredibly good bonuses: 25% attack power, 125% armor rating, -20% cooling time for screams and 25% resistance against frost and fire. In fact, Dragonborn becomes a tank within 300 seconds. Even on the second level, this cry is pretty amazing. Once Dragonborn is at 50 HP or below, the dragon will come to help him in battle. Because of how powerful this cry is, its use is unfortunately limited right into the day, but it's definitely worth using against incredibly powerful enemies. 8 Disarm While it may be a little unfair to bring the sword into a fistfight, this is exactly what this next cry allows you to do. Disarmament, true to its name, forces enemies to give up their weapons, leaving them largely defenseless for your attacks. They can either try to get their lost hands or fight you in the head with nothing but fists, but, in any case, it will turn the battle in your favor. However, this cry only works for enemies with weapons to fall. Any animals or assault rifles or dragons, none of which carry weapons, will not actually be affected by this cry. This is definitely useful in specific situations, but not for every meeting. 7 Soul Tears During Adventures in Dawnguard DLC, learns a new cry from Durnehviir, the undead dragon. This cry is extremely useful and causes great damage. The tear of the soul is essentially a tear away shower, which dishes out about 300 points of damage when aligned to three words. Moreover, if the enemy is killed by this cry, he will fill the soul with a pearl. The killed enemy will rise again and will fight on the side of the Dragon, which is a pretty cool and unique feature. For those who want to collect soul gems for the charming and who like a little spice in their cries, it is definitely strong to consider learning. 6 Dragonrend The fact that dragons and humans are not the power of flight, and while there is nothing in Skyrim that gives you wings, not counting extensions or mods, you can bring dragons to size. Dragonrend is the cry you get during the history of the game and it allows you to force any dragons to land for a while. This can be very useful since dragons tend to fly and hover in places, sending powerful attacks on you before they end up ground and can be hacked with melee weapons. Obviously, this scream can't be used against any other enemy in the game, but it remains an incredibly comfortable force to have on hand when looking to shoot the dragon. 5 The unforgiving power of the Signature scream from Skyrim and probably the first thing the players will get, the unforgiving power, literally the strength to be reckoned with. At its completely updated level, it sends forward an overwhelming burst of power that beats everything and everything in its path, from enemies to objects of physics. There's also just something inherently fun to hear your character say the iconic Fus Roh Yes! Line up and seeing things explode in front of you. Combine this with the damage it does, the rollback effect, and the hilarious physics of the ragdoll, and you have a big dragon cry. 4 Ice Form Although there is Frost Breath screaming in Skyrim, it works more akin to the usual mechanics of frost, damaging the health of the enemy and endurance, rather than too much yet. However, the icy form of screaming works a little differently. This force instantly freezes anyone in front of the player in a block of ice, completely immobilizing them. Any number of enemies can be paralyzed in this way, from modest roaming road bandits to the giants themselves. From there, you can get in close and attack them until they're down. Even after the ice is erased, they still have to get up before they can do anything that makes Ice Form an incredible scream. 3 Calling a dragon with all the hostile dragons roaming the wilds, it can feel quite difficult to take them all as just a man-well, Dragonborn, but still. So the power to summon your own dragon into battle is incredibly appealing. Scream Call Dragon is obtained by following history and allowing you to give birth to a scaly ally of your own. The dragon you call is invincible and cannot be killed, only temporarily shot down. He will do all the standard dragon stuff from flying around to breathing fire to swiping at your enemies with his sharp claws. When the fight is over, he'll leave until you decide to call it again, which will probably be soon, considering how awesome it is to have the whole dragon fighting for you! 2 To call Upon Durnehviir, calling any dragon is one thing, but to call Durnehviir is another matter. This dragon is found in Dawnguard DLC, and it is different from most other dragons. Durnehviir actually disintegrates, he undead dragon is able to summon undead creatures to his aid. When called in to help Dragonbourne in battle, he can also use his call abilities. In addition, it will use screams like drain Vitality and Frost Breathing rather than a normal Fire Breath attack. Durnehviir can be called every 6 minutes roughly. 1 Slow time is finally our last record and what we think is the best shout in all Skyrim is the slowest time. This cry is exactly what he says on the box; power that makes everyone move in slow motion for a while. Enemies move slower, shells hover in the air, and you can unleash a barrage of attacks that no one is ready for. The player slowed down a bit from the scream, but not to the same extent as everything else. This can be combined with all other ways of other strategies, whether used to prolong the effective duration of potions, deal with a huge number of attacks in a short period of time, or charge spells to blow everything away. Regardless of your style of play, Slow Time is a must-cry and the best available in the game.
